CATARRH

Five Years' Sickness Cured, by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,
and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. AMAND, P.Q. Sept. 12, 1876.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,

DEAR IR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CON-STITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old; had been out of health for about four years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines,
without finding any permanent benefit, so continued to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs,
such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle
of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles
I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as shopping
and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

Yours truly HENRY NIDER,

A TRAMP.

BY CHAS. S. ALBERT.

Only a tramp. He came walking in,
With a bundle of clothes and an odor
of gin;

Haggard and worn with rheumatic pae-
gin and the bloom of roses upon his face.

On the waste paper basket he took a seat
And the table embellished he with his
feet;

He sat on genius without regret,
And it got all the pressing 'twill ever get.

Down, still down, in the basket he
went.

Till he sat on a pin that was slightly bent
Without delay he arose from his "sit"
And talked profane hist'ry a little bit.

Then down the stairs went my imprac-
ticed friend,
With the toe of my boot on his gable end
Kindly I helped him four steps at
bound,
Till he revolved out on solid ground.

He shook his fist at our sanctum door.
And made a few demonstrations more;
Then with his clothes and odor of gin
The tramp went off as he didn't come in

THE CAPTAIN'S SACRIFICE

There are heroic souls who snatched
their hard living from the perilous toil
of our Northern lakes. Rough and rude
perhaps, but not the less are they heroes
George Manly was such a man. He ha-
begun life as the son of a lake skipper
working his way by mainly independenc-
and straight forward honesty, until, a
twenty-seven, he was master of his own
schooner, and had paid his old moth-above want. His father died a year before he was ranked among the owners o
lake craft, leading the son who ha-
smoothed his way into the dark valley
Laboring for the sake of his parents, th
sailor had but little time to give to othe
matters or to think of his own pleasure
He had his dreams (what young man ha-
not?) of a home of his own, and a lovin woman to fill and make it bright. Bu
he had closed his eyes to the thought
until, at twenty-six, men called him
cynic because he avoided women. He was no cynic when the cry of the need
was heard, no cynic when those in the
distance called on him to aid.

He was hurrying home one night
through the darkened streets of the city, having just entered port from Chicago with a cargo of grain. It was a bitter night, and the cold rain drove in his face and chilled him to the bone. He
wrapped his water-proof coat about him
and laughed at the storm. Suddenly he
heard a cry, and turning, saw a woman
sink fainting to the pavement. It wa
an old woman, in the dress of the poor er class, carrying a bundle. He lifted
her and carried her into a drug store
where she was received, while he stood
by waiting until she could speak.
"Where do you live?" he asked

"You cannot walk."

"I will," replied the stout old creas "He needs me, and I was his nurse,"

"I'll get a cab and take her up,"

Manly. "Make her wait."

So they retained her while he went out to get a cab, and when it came drove through the night and steps, half carrying the old lady, was still weak. His ring at the bell answered, not by a servant, but young lady, who held a lamp aloft who were at the door. As she there, with a flood of yellow light about her, the young man though had never seen anything so beat and, like Price Geraint, when he Euid at her father's ruined home felt that this was

"The one maid for him."

Her fair hair was banded back in braids from her high forehead, and eyes shown with a happy light. A wrapper of some dark material was fastened at the waist by a golden buckle, and he caught a glint of a little foot peeping out beneath, the startled look on her face hastened to explain.

"You must not be frightened," he said. "This old lady was taken the street, and I happened to be so I brought her here, as she said must come to 150 Mount Street."

"You are very kind," replied the in her sweet low voice. "My father unwell, and sent for his old nurse, I did not think she would come out such a night as this. Are you now, aunty?"

"She calls me aunty, the daughter said the old lady, "though I'm no kin to her than you, blessin's on handsome face! It's few young would take the trouble for an old like me."

"The gentleman must be very said the girl. "Shall I not show you room where you can have a fire? It's a pleasure to me."

"Thank you, miss," said the man, bashfully, turning his wet coat. "But I've an older man at home that will be anxious about as I'm a sailor, and she knows I ad the Welland, and will expect me

One of the Testimonials.

From Dr. Duncan McCallum, Montreal.

I, the undersigned, have been suffering very much for the last two years from Rheumatism in the ankle joint, so much that I was often prevented from attending to my calling, but three applications of Dr. Birnbaum's Rheumatism and Gout Remedy gave me that relief from pain and stiffness which I did not experience for the last two years, and after eight day's use of that remedy, I find myself entirely cured.

I owe this statement to the public, to the profession, and to the merits of the genuine article.

Her fair hair was banded back in great braids from her high forehead, and her eyes shone with a happy light. A plain wrapper of some dark material was confined at the waist by a girdle clasped by golden buckle, and he caught a glimpse of a little foot peeping out beneath. Seeing the startled look on her face, hastened to explain.

"You must not be frightened, miss," he said. "This old lady was taken ill in the street, and I happened to be near, so I brought her here, as she said she must come to 150 Mount Street."

"You are very kind," replied the girl in her sweet low voice. "My father was unwell, and sent for his old nurse, but did not think she would come out up such a night as this. Are you better now, aunty?"

"She calls me aunty, the darlin' said the old lady, "though I'm no relation to her than you, blessin' on your handsome face! It's few young men would take the trouble for an old dame like me."

"The gentleman must be very welcome," said the girl. "Shall I not show you room where you can have a fire? It would be a pleasure to me."

"Thank you, miss," said the young man, bashfully, turning his wet coat from his hands. "But I've an older mother at home that will be anxious about me as I'm a sailor, and she knows I pass the Weiland, and will expect me."

"But you must leave your name, sir. My father is a sailor too, and will wait to thank you."

"No need of that, miss. I only did any one with the heart of a man would have done. But he knows me well enough—Captain George Manly, of the schooner Flying Arrow."

"Indeed!" she said, with a bright smile. "I have heard him speak of you often, and after what I have seen of you, I can well believe all his praise you."

Poor George blushed to the very roots of his hair, and plunged into the cabin ordering the driver in sailor fashion, "heave ahead," and was driven rapidly home. Next day, while he was on the schooner, a boy came down with a note from Captain Archer, asking him to come up; and he was only too glad to accept himself of the invitation, though he would not acknowledge that he wished to have another glimpse of Mary Archer's beautiful face. He went in the evening, a Captain Archer, somewhat recovered from his indisposition, received him with the bluff welcome which only sailors can give, and made him feel at home at once. Then Mary came in, radiant in beauty and played melodies, mournful and gay, with a feeling and expression which a young sailor never had dreamed of. He sat in a perfect maze, watching white fingers threading in and out among the keys of the piano-forte, evoking sweet music from the depths of the old instrument. He would have sat there for hours watching her and listening to the music, but Captain Archer would not have it. He liked to talk.

"Stop clawing that piano, Mary," said, laughing. "What do you mean? When my young friend Manly comes see me, do you think I do not want to hear him talk? There, get a chair this side of the fire. I'm glad you go

MILES STORMS

A TRAMP.

BY CHAS. S. ALBERT.

Only a tramp. He came walking in
With a bundle of clothes and an odor of gin;

Haggard and worn with rheumatic pase,
And the bloom of roses upon his face.

On the waste paper basket he took a seat,
And the table embellished he with his
feet;

He sat on genius without regret,
And it got all the pressing 'twill ever get.

Down, still down, in the basket he
went.

Till he sat on a pin that was slightly bent
Without delay he arose from his "sit,"
And talked profane hist'ry a little bit.

Then down the stairs went my improvised friend,

With the toe of my boot on his gable end;
Kindly I helped him four steps at a
bound,

Till he revolved out on solid ground.

He shook his fist at our sanctum door.
And made a few demonstrations more;
Then with his clothes and odor of gin
The tramp went off as he didn't come in.

THE CAPTAIN'S SACRIFICE.

There are heroic souls who snatch
their hard living from the perilous toils
of our Northern lakes. Rough and rude,
perhaps, but not the less are they heroes.
George Manly was such a man. He had
begun life as the son of a lake skipper,
working his way by manly independence
and straight forward honesty, until, at
twenty-seven, he was master of his own
schooner, and had packed his old mother
above want. His father died a year before he was ranked among the owners of lake craft, blessing the son who had
smoothed his way into the dark valley.
Laboring for the sake of his parents, the sailor had but little time to give to other
matters or to think of his own pleasure.
He had his dreams (what young man has not?) of home of his own, and a loving woman to fill and make it bright. But
he had closed his eyes to the thought
until, at twenty-six, men called him a cynic because he avoided women. He
was no cynic when the cry of the needy
was heard, no cynic when those in the
distance called on him to aid.

He was hurrying home one night
through the darkened streets of the city, having just extorted port from Chicago with a cargo of grain. It was a bitter night, and the cold rain drove in
his face and chilled him to the bone. He
wrapped his water-proof coat about him
and laughed at the storm. Suddenly he
heard a cry, and turning, saw a woman
sink fainting to the pavement. It was an old woman, in the dress of the poorer class, carrying a bundle. He lifted
her and carried her into a drug store,
where she was received, while he stood
by waiting until she could speak.

"Where do you live?" he asked,

just as you did last night, George, tor,
late in the fall as it is, the coast is dangerous.
Did you hear of any wrecks?"

"Ay, indeed; the upper lake coast is lined with them. Thunder Bay is full of them, and I saw a bark ashore off Nine-mile Point, but her crew had left her.
The Bermuda was in Port Dalhousie
when I left, with a broken foremast. She will be down to-morrow, I reckon."

"It's a terrible life you live," said
Myra, softly. She was sitting on a low stool, with her head upon her father's knee. "I used to fall asleep nights and when the wind rose, I would be awake
in a moment, thinking of dear papa."

"She's tender-hearted, is my little girl,"
said the captain, laying a caressing hand
upon her head—"mighty tender-hearted,
to be sure. I'm going to tell you a story about a man who sails these lakes; not an old man, yet in experience he is as old as the gayest among us. He used to sail a little sloop out of this port, and wants a matter of forty miles up the coast
for any load he could get. It wasn't much of a boat, you understand. He had two men besides himself, and one of them was in the cabin sick with the ague."

"Captain!" said George faintly.

"Well, what is it? Don't cross my
hawse in that matter, you young lubber.
Let me tell the story."

"I wish you wouldn't," said George.

"Nonsense. You can see how short handed this young un was, with only one man to manage a pretty heavy sheet, for some one had to steer; and there came up one of the biggest blows we had that year—a squall, I ought to have said.
When it struck her she had done nothing
reefed snug, so it did no harm to the sloop,
but it washed the sailor before the mast
overboard. What do you think he did,
this young captain? Did he leave that struggling man to his fate, and sail on before the wind? Not a bit of it. He threw her up in the wind, fastened the tiller, and ran down to bring the sick man up in his arms, and brought him on deck, propped him up against the helm,
and got out a little dingy the sloop carried
—not much bigger than a Panama hat—
and went after that man. What do you think of that young tarry-jacket, eh? What are you blushing at, George Manly? You can't bear to hear good deeds spoken of,
can you?"

"He did it," said Myra, with a glowing face. "He must not deny it, for I won't believe it."

He passed a pleasant evening, and after that found it very convenient to drop into the captain's house during the winter evenings to play a game of chess with him. And when the captain was not at home—and it was astonishing how often that happened—he would stay to sing duets with Mary. George had a magnificent voice, and they sang well together.
The winter wore away, and George had fitted out the Flying Arrow
for her upward trip, when Captain Archer
came down to the boat.

"You don't go out to night, George?"
he said.

"I think so. The wind turns at midnight, and I think I must take advantage of it."

THE TOMB OF AGAMEMNON.

Dr. Henry Schliemann, writing to the Times under date Mycenæ November 28,
continues the account of his great discoveries:

"I continue the description of the jewels, &c., found with the five bodies in the fourth tomb. Among the most interesting objects of his sepulchre I reckon
the magnificently ornamented gold buttons. Twelve are in the form of a cross,
and one of them is 2 1-5 inches large
and 8 inches long; three are somewhat smaller, and the remaining eight are of a still less size. Of splendidly ornamented round gold buttons were found in all 216,
two of which are two inches in diameter,
seven are of the size of a 5¢ piece and 207 are still smaller. All these buttons, the lower part of which consists of a bone button in the form of our shirtbuttons, must have served on the clothes of the deceased, whereas all which show
below only a flat piece of bone or wood have evidently served to decorate the sheaths of swords, lances, &c., to which they had been soldered with tin or otherwise fastened. There were in all found
in this tomb 25 two-edged bronze swords,
16 of which are in a perfect state of conservation; four of them had handles plated with gold and richly ornamented. There were also found with the swords
five large handle-buttons, four of which
are of alabaster and one of wood; all of
them are ornamented with gold nails.
Further, two golden shoulder-belts (telamons), which were worn on the shoulder across the breast; both are 4 ft.
long and 1 3-5 in. broad. There were further found two large golden girdle
belts ornamented with circles and flowers;
one of them is composed of two pieces.
There was also found part of a similar
belt and a child's golden girdle belt, only 1 ft. 4 in. long, and 2 15 in. broad. Further a splendidly ornamented large golden handle, probably of a sceptre. It terminates in a dragon's head, whose scales
seem to have been inlaid by square
pieces of rock crystal, which are inlaid
like mosaic. This is an object of marvellous beauty, of which Homer would have said thauma ideethia (a wonder to look upon). There were also found seven large and one small golden diadems—one
of the former is ornamented with golden leaves. All of them show splendid ornaments of circles and spiral lines. Further four golden ornaments of the kneides
(graves) almost in form of a bracelet; one
comb of bone in a large handle or casing
of gold, of the usual form, as ladies wear
it; one enormous, most magnificently
ornamented, massive golden bracelet,
weighing 360 grammes. In the centre of the ornamentation of this bracelet is soldered a separate piece of gold, representing the sun with his rays. The size
of this bracelet is so enormous that the
persons who have worn it must have had gigantic arms. It may have been worn on the legs. Quiet in opposition to the size of the bracelets are the too massive golden seal
golden seal rings, the opening of which is
so small that they would only fit a child of ten years. I, therefore, suppose that they may have been used as seals only.
One of the seals represents two warriors

"Then you will have plenty of time.
Where have you been the last two weeks?
Mary had something to tell you. I must do it myself. My little girl is going to be married to-night."

George turned quickly away, and looked steadily across the harbor for a moment
before he could trust himself to speak.

"Isn't it rather sudden?"

"Well, yes. I'll tell you about it. You see, he lives in Toronto, Gale Merrick
does, and it was there my little girl met him. They have been engaged over a year. I wonder she never told you, for she always said, if she could trust any one on earth, it would be George Manly."

"I'm glad she likes me," said George,
in a cold, dry tone. "I wish her every joy that can come to woman. She'll be true wife to him, and she'll deserve all
the love that any man can give her."

"Why, you've got to come yourself, George. Do you think Myra would be married and you not there? Why, there isn't a man on earth she honors more than you, and I believe if she hadn't met Gale, and been promised to him before
she saw you, she would have given her heart to you."

"No," said George, sadly. "No such luck. I—I don't think I can come, captain. Say I wish them happy, but I can't get away. I would if I could."

"I don't believe she will take no for an answer then," said the captain. "She'll send the carriage down for you, sure."

And so she did. But George had disappeared, and none of the sailors seemed to know where he had gone. The carriage came twice, but each time he was away. Where was he? Crouched down in a secluded corner of the lumber-yard

near at hand, fighting the battle with his true, honest heart. "I could have loved
her dearly," he said. "Life seems ended.
And she asked me to come and see her marriage, the innocent child! She never knew I loved her, never knew how my heart was crying out to her night and day. Oh, Myra! Myra!"

He was so near the schooner that he heard the carriage come and go twice,

they had been soldered with tin or otherwise fastened. There were in all found

in this tomb 25 two-edged bronze swords,

16 of which are in a perfect state of conservation; four of them had haftes plated with gold and richly ornamented.

There were also found with the swords

five large handle-buttons, four of which

are of alabaster and one of wood; all of

them are ornamented with gold nails.

There was also found part of a similar

belt and a child's golden girdle belt, only

1 ft. 4 in. long, and 2 1/2 in. broad.

Further a splendidly ornamented large gold

handle, probably of a sceptre. It ter-

minates in a dragon's head, whose scales

seem to have been imitated by square

pieces of rock crystal, which are inlaid

like mosaic. This is an object of mar-

large and one small golden diadems—one

of the former is ornamented with golden

four golden ornaments of the knemides

(graves) almost in form of a bracelet; one

comb of bone in a large handle or casing

of gold, of the usual form, as ladies wear

it; one enormous, most magnificently

ornamented, massive golden bracelet,

weighing 360 grammes. In the centre of the ornamentation of this bracelet is

senting the sun with his rays. The size

of this bracelet is so enormous that the

the bracelets are too massive golden seal

golden seal rings, the opening, of which is

so small that they would only fit a child of ten years. I, therefore, suppose that they may have been used as seals only.

One of the seals represents two warriors

on a two-wheeled chariot with two horses

which seem to run at full gallop; one of

the warriors is holding a bow in his hand,

and has just shot an arrow at a stag; the

stag is wounded, and in anguish turns his head. The other seal ring represents a warrior who has just vanquished his

three enemies and is in the act of giving

with his uplifted sword a last blow to one of them wounded and kneeling before him

on one knee; the latter tries to parry

the blow with his uplifted hands and with a

lance, which he holds in his right, and

seems to throw at his opponent. Another

seems to be mortally wounded, for he lies on the ground leaning on both his hands. The third, who alone of all the four warriors has a helmet with a crest

on his head, is flying under the cover of an enormous shield which reaches from his neck to his heels; but still he turns his

head towards his victorious enemy; and is in the act of throwing a lance at him. The anatomy of all the men is so well observed, their posture is so faithful to nature,

and everything is executed with so much

art, that when I brought to light these rings, I involuntarily exclaimed, "The author of the "Iliad" and the "Olyssey"

can only have been born and educated in

a civilization which could produce such wonders. Only a poet who had masterpieces of art like these continually before

his eyes could compose those divine

poems."

"At the head of one of the bodies was found a large and heavy golden helmet,

but it had been much crushed and had

become nearly flat under the ponderous

weight which pressed upon it. In its present state it is difficult to describe it.

On its forepart the openings for the eyes and

mouth, as also a protuberance, ornamented

with small stars, are distinctly visible,

as also in the top of the helmet, the tubs

for the crest. The back part is beautifully ornamented with an imitation of the hair. The face of the same body

was covered with one of the golden

masks mentioned in my last letter,

and its breast and sides by a 1 ft. 8 in.

"He needs me, and I was his nurse,"
"I'll get a cab and take her up," said Manly. "Make her wait."

So they retained her while he hurried out to get a cab, and when it came they drove through the night and storm to 150 Mount Street, and Manly ran up the steps, half carrying the old lady, who was still weak. His ring at the bell was answered, not by a servant, but by a young lady, who held a lamp aloft to see who were at the door. As she stood there, with a flood of yellow light falling about her, the young man thought he had never seen any thing so beautiful, and, like Price Geraint, when he saw Euid at her father's ruined home, he felt that this was

"The one maid for him."

Her fair hair was banded back in great braids from her high forehead, and her eyes shone with a happy light. A plain wrapper of some dark material was confined at the waist by a girdle clasped by a golden buckle, and he caught a glimpse of a little foot peeping out beneath. Seeing the startled look on her face, he hastened to explain.

"You must not be frightened, miss," he said. "This old lady was taken ill in the street, and I happened to be near, so I brought her here, as she said she must come to 150 Mount Street."

"You are very kind," replied the girl, in her sweet low voice. "My father was unwell, and sent for his old nurse, but he did not think she would come out upon such a night as this. Are you better now, aunty?"

"She calls me aunty, the darlin'," said the old lady, "though I'm no more kin to her than you, blessin's on your handsome face! It's few young men would take the trouble for an old dame like me."

"The gentleman must be very wet," said the girl. "Shall I not show you a room where you can have a fire? It will be a pleasure to me."

"Thank you, miss," said the young man, bashfully, turning his wet coat in his hands. "But I've an older mother at home that will be anxious about me, as I'm a sailor, and she knows I passed the Welland, and will expect me."

"But you must leave your name, Sir. My father is a sailor too, and will want to thank you."

"No need of that, miss. I only did as any one with the heart of a man would have done. But he knows me well enough—Captain George Manly, of the schooner Flying Arrow."

"Indeed!" she said, with a bright smile. "I have heard him speak of you often, and after what I have seen tonight, I can well believe all his praise of you."

Poor George blushed to the very roots of his hair, and plunged into the cab, ordering the driver in sailor fashion, to "heave ahead," and was driven rapidly home. Next day, while he was on the schooner, a boy came down with a note from Captain Archer, asking him to come up; and he was only too glad to avail himself of the invitation, though he would not acknowledge that he wished to get another glimpse of Mary Archer's beautiful face. He went in the evening, and Captain Archer, somewhat recovered from his indisposition, received him with the bluff welcome which only sailors can give, and made him feel at home at once. Then Mary came in, radiant in beauty, and played melodies, mournful and gay, with a feeling and expression which the young sailor never had dreamed of. He sat in a perfect maze, watching her white fingers threading in and out among the keys of the piano-forte, and evoking sweet music from the depths of the old instrument. He would have sat there for hours watching her and listening to the music, but Captain Archer would not have it. He liked to talk.

"Stop clawing that piano, Mary," he said, laughing. "What do you mean? When my young friend Manly comes to see me, do you think I do not want to hear him talk? There, get a chair on this side of the fire. I'm glad you got in ed steadily across the harbor for a moment before he could trust himself to speak.

"Isn't it rather sudden?"

"Well, yes. I'll tell you about it. You see, he lives in Toronto," Gale Merrick does, and it was there my little girl met him. They have been engaged over a year. I wonder she never told you, for she always said, if she could trust any one on earth, it would be George Manly."

"I'm glad she likes me," said George, in a cold, dry tone. "I wish her every joy that can come to woman. She'll be a true wife to him, and she'll deserve all the love that any man can give her."

"Why, you've got to come yourself, George. Do you think Myra would be married and you not there? Why, there isn't a man on earth she honors more than you, and I believe if she hadn't met Gale, and been promised to him before she saw you, she would have given her heart to you."

"No," said George, sadly. "No such luck. I—I don't think I can come, captain. Say I wish them happy, but I can't get away. I would if I could."

"I don't believe she will take no for an answer then," said the captain. "She'll send the carriage down for you, sure."

And so she did. But George had disappeared, and none of the sailors seemed to know where he had gone. The carriage came twice, but each time he was away. Where was he? Crouched down in a secluded corner of the lumber-yard near at hand, fighting the battle with his true, honest heart. "I could have loved her dearly," he said. "Life seems ended. And she asked me to come and see her marriage, the innocent child! She never knew I loved her, never knew how my heart was crying out to her night and day. Oh, Myra! Myra!"

He was so near the schooner that he heard the carriage come and go twice, and was glad it had not found him. Then his mood changed, and he felt that he must see her before she changed her maiden name, or die. He went to the schooner, threw off the blouse which he wore over his clothing, and went up. A servant met him in the hall.

"He's come! he's come!" she cried. "Oh, Mr. George, this will so please Miss Myra! She was almost crying because you would not come to see her married, and the carriage has just gone for you again."

"I suppose I could not see her before—since she is married?" faltered George.

"I'll ask," said the girl. "I know she'll come. Go into the parlor and I'll send her down."

Soon there was a rustle of muslin, and Myra floated into the room, so full of beauty and light that poor George stood, like one transfixed, gazing at her. Radiant! That was a tame word to describe such beauty as hers in her bridal dress. She gave him both hands in the hearty manner which had alway characterized her treatment of him, and he took them in a clasp which made her start.

"You dear, good George!" she said. "So you thought better of it and come, after all. I would never have forgiven you if you had staid away—never, never."

"I am glad I came," he said, softly. "It is better so—better, far better. I wish I knew the man you are to marry. He must be a good man to be worthy of you."

"How highly you think of me, George!" she said. "I do not deserve it at your hands; but I would rather have you think well of me than any man—except Gale—in the wide world. There, you must let me go, for the bride-maids are calling me, and I am not quite ready. How do I look?"

He gave her such a look that she needed no other answer, but fled with glowing cheeks up the stairs. An hour after, George Manly stood in the shadow of the window-curtain, and saw her standing with her lover, and heard the solemn words fall from the lips of the divine: "And whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

a warrior who has just vanquished his three enemies and is in the act of giving with his uplifted sword a last blow to one of them wounded and kneeling before him on one knee; the latter tries to parry the blow with his uplifted hands and with a lance, which he holds in his right, and seems to throw at his opponent. Another seems to be mortally wounded, for he lies on the ground leaning on both his hands. The third, who alone of all the four warriors has a helmet with a crest on his head, is flying under the cover of an enormous shield which reaches from his neck to his heels; but still, he turns his head towards his victorious enemy; and is in the act of throwing a lance at him. The anatomy of all the men is so well observed, their posture is so faithful to nature, and everything is executed with so much art, that, when I brought to light these rings, I involuntarily exclaimed. "The author of the 'Iliad' and the 'Odyssey' can only have been born and educated in a civilization which could produce such wonders. Only a poet who had masterpieces of art like these continually before his eyes could compose those divine poems."

"At the head of one of the bodies was found a large and heavy golden helmet, but it had been much crushed and had become nearly flat under the ponderous weight which pressed upon it. In its present state it is difficult to describe it. On its forepart the openings for the eyes and mouth, as also a protuberance, ornamented with small stars, are distinctly visible, as also in the top of the helmet, the tubs for the crest. The back part is beautifully ornamented with an imitation of the hair. The face of the same body was covered with one of the golden masks mentioned in my last letter, and its breast and sides by a 1 ft. 8 in. long, and 1 ft. broad, thick plate of gold, which was no doubt intended to represent the coat of mail. There were further found 100 leaves of gold, either of circular or of crosslike form, with impressed ornamentation, consisting either of spiral lines or of circles. Further three very heavy golden breastpins, of which the one is 5*1*/₂, the other 5, and the third 4*1*/₂ inches long. The last is crowned with a ram, the two others with an ornament in shape of a helmet, and the heads of all the three breastpins are perforated, probably to put in a flower. There were further found two masterly ornamented objects of massive gold in the form of crosses; also a large golden vase weighing 1*1*/₂ kilogrammes; it has two handles, a large foot, and ornamented with three upper and two lower parallel lines, between which is a row of 14 stars; further a large golden vase with one handle and an ornamentation representing seven beautiful flowers; another golden vase with two handles; further a splendid little golden oenochoe or wine can, with an ornamentation of spiral lines. Further, six golden drinking cups, one of which is a dipas amphikypteron with two handles, on each of which is a pigeon, each of the two handles being joined to the foot by two separate golden blades. This goblet reminds us of Nestor's goblet, which was also ornamented with pigeons (see "Iliad," XI, 632-635). One of the other goblets is ornamented with parallel flutings. There were further found two small golden vessels; also eight silver vases, three of which are admirably conserved; one of the other five has the bottom and the mouth of bronze, below its bottom were found one hundred of the aforesaid golden buttons. I further found in this tomb thirteen large bronze vessels. This kind of vessel was in high esteem in the heroic age, and we see them continually mentioned by Homer as prizes in the games. I suppose that to each hero were given in the grave the goblets and other objects which were dear to him in his lifetime, having been won by him in the games, or having been given to him by his hosts as a pledge of hospitality and friendship. There was also found a large quantity of small perforated amber balls of necklaces and a bronze or copper fork with three teeth, which had probably served on the funeral pyres. There were further found thirty-five arrow heads of obsidian. No-

it as you did last night, George, for in the fall as it is, the coast is dangerous. Did you hear of any wrecks?" "Ay, indeed; the upper lake coast is ed with them. Thunder Bay is full of them, and I saw a bark ashore off Nine-le Point, but her crew had left her. Bermuda was in Port Dalhousie when I left, with a broken foremast. She'll be down to-morrow, I reckon."

"It is a terrible life you live," said Myra, softly. She was sitting on a low stool, with her head upon her father's shoulder. "I used to fall asleep nights and in the wind rose, I would be awake a moment, thinking of dear papa." "She's tender-hearted, is my little girl," said the captain, laying a caressing hand on her head—"mighty tender-hearted, be sure. I'm going to tell you a story about a man who sails these lakes; not old man, yet in experience he is as gay as the gayest among us. He used to be a little sloop out of this port, and in a matter of forty miles up the coast any load he could get. It wasn't much of a boat, you understand. He had two men besides himself, and one of them was in the cabin sick with the ague." "Captain!" said George faintly.

"Well, what is it? Don't cross my wits in that matter, you young lubber. Let me tell the story."

"I wish you wouldn't," said George. "Nonsense. You can see how short-aded this young un was, with only one man to manage a pretty heavy sheet, for no one had to steer; and there came one of the biggest blows we had that night—a squall, I ought to have said. When it struck her she had everything fished up, so it did no harm to the sloop, it washed the sailor before the mast overboard. What do you think he did? A young captain? Did he leave that nailing man to his fate, and sail on over the wind? Not a bit of it. He hewed his way through the wind, fastened the sloop, and ran down to bring the sick man up in his arms, and brought him on deck, propped him up against the helm, and got out a little dingy the sloop carried not much bigger than a Panama hat—I went after that man. What do you think of that young tarry-jacket, eh? What you blushing at, George Manly? You don't bear to hear good deeds spoken of, you?"

"He did it," said Myra, with a glowing smile. "He must not deny it, for I won't believe it."

He passed a pleasant evening, and when that found it very convenient to go into the captain's house during the inter evenings to play a game of chess with him. And when the captain was at home—and it was astonishing how it happened—he would stay to go duets with Mary. George had a magnificent voice, and they sang well together. The winter wore away, and George had fitted out the Flying Arrow for his upward trip, when Captain Archer came down to the boat.

"You don't go out to night, George?" said.

I think so. The wind turns at midnight, and I think I must take advantage of it."

THE TOMB OF AGAMEMNON.

Dr. Henry Schliemann, writing to the Times under date Mycene November 28, continues the account of his great discoveries:

"I continue the description of the jewels, &c., found with the five bodies in the fourth tomb. Among the most interesting objects of his sepulchre I reckon the magnificently ornamented gold buttons. Twelve are in the form of a cross, and one of them is 2 1/5 inches large and 8 inches long; three are somewhat smaller, and the remaining eight are of a still less size. Of splendidly ornamented round gold buttons were found in all 216, two of which are two inches in diameter, seven are of the size of a 5f. piece and 207 are still smaller. All these buttons, the lower part of which consists of a bone button in the form of our shirt-buttons, must have served on the clothes of the deceased, whereas all which show below only a flat piece of bone or wood have evidently served to decorate the sheaths of swords, lances, &c., to which they had been soldered with tin or otherwise fastened. There were in all found in this tomb 25 two-edged bronze swords, 16 of which are in a perfect state of conservation; four of them had handles plated with gold and richly ornamented. There were also found with the swords five large handle-buttons, four of which are of alabaster and one of wood; all of them are ornamented with gold nails. Further, two golden shoulder-belts (telamones), which were worn on the shoulder across the breast; both are 4 ft. long and 1 3/5 in. broad. There were further found two large golden girdle belts ornamented with circles and flowers; one of them is composed of two pieces. There was also found part of a similar belt and a child's golden girdle belt, only 1 ft. 4 in. long, and 2 1/5 in. broad. Further a splendidly ornamented large golden handle, probably of a sceptre. It terminates in a dragon's head, whose scales seem to have been imitated by square pieces of rock crystal, which are inlaid like mosaic. This is an object of marvellous beauty, of which Homer would have said thrauma ideethia (a wonder to look upon). There were also found seven large and one small golden diadems—one of the former is ornamented with golden leaves. All of them show splendid ornaments of circles and spiral lines. Further four golden ornaments of the knemides (graves) almost in form of a bracelet; one comb of bone in a large handle or casing of gold, of the usual form, as ladies wear it; one enormous, most magnificently ornamented, massive golden bracelet, weighing 360 grammes. In the centre of the ornamentation of this bracelet is soldered a separate piece of gold, representing the sun with his rays. The size of this bracelet is so enormous that the persons who have worn it must have had gigantic arms. It may have been worn on the legs. Quiet in opposition to the size of the bracelets are too massive golden seal rings, the opening of which is so small that they would only fit a child of ten years. I, therefore, suppose that they may have been used as seals only. One of the seals represents two warriors

in combat, the other a lion and a griffin.

to most of them were found some arrow heads, for the "Iliad" seems to know only arrow heads of bronze (e.g., Iliad XIII., 650 and 662). Probably there had also been deposited bows and quivers in the tomb, but they would have been of wood, and would have rotted away. To my greatest regret, among the thousands of gold ornaments there is not even a single sign resembling writing, and it therefore appears certain that the sepulchres belong to an epoch which preceded the introduction of the Phoenician alphabet. Had the latter been known, the Mycenean golden signs, continued efforts appear to have been directed to the invention of a new ornamentation, would have been very ambitious to show the novelty of the alphabet. A second proof of the immense antiquity of those tombs is the entire absence of any vestige of either iron or glass, or of any pottery, made on the potter's wheel. But the hand pottery has reached a high degree of perfection, such as has never been attained here in later days by the pottery made on the wheel."

MATCHING A PATTERN.

One of the fascinating young men in an up-town dry-good store (says the San Francisco Post) is in trouble. It is the custom in the establishment from which he has just been dismissed to discharge a man who fails to sell to one of three successive customers. "Swapping" is the expressive technical term by which this failure is known in the dry-goods business. The rule is not universal, but it is by no means exceptional in dry-goods stores. However unjust it may be, it has a wonderfully stimulating effect on the elegant young men amenable to it, and when they cannot sell goods it is a safe inference that the customer is either supernaturally obdurate, impudent, or miserly. The young man referred to had "first call" last Friday morning; that is, the first customer who entered the store was by the rule of rotation his exclusive victim. Next morning this privilege would fall to the lot of some other clerk, and so on to the end of the list. The second was in an equal unpropitious state of mind, and, retired without effecting a purchase. On the decision of the third hung his fate. His ample cheek blanched as she darkened the doorway, for a more unlikely purchaser could with difficulty have been found. An old striped shawl was thrown carelessly over her shoulders, and partially concealed a roll of calico which the palpitative heart of the clerk instinctively felt that she came to have matched. Now if there is anything in the dry-goods business more soul harrowing than another it is to match goods. The exact shade and texture have to be found, and last, but not least, the price must correspond. A feeling of sickening despair permeated the heavy breast of the unfortunate clerk as he asked, "Well, ma'ma?"

She laid down five yards and a half of calico of an eccentric pattern, and intimated that the success of a great dress-making enterprise hinged on her fortune in getting another yard and a half of the

AN ACCOMPLISHED RASCAL.

One of the most prominent detectives of this city is Druskowitz, a Dalmatian. Among the remarkable cases in which he has been engaged was one which happened about ten years ago. In 1866 Vital Dourt, a Bordeaux wine merchant, went to Paris, and insured his life for $5,000. Shortly afterwards he went to London, in order to escape the consequences of a fraudulent bankruptcy. Some time later his wife, clad in widow's attire, presented herself at the insurance office with the necessary legal documents attesting her husband's death. There was nothing suspicious in the papers. Nevertheless the company determined to make some inquiries before handing over the amount of insurance. Druskowitz was called in, and he ascertained that on Dec. 1, 1866, some one named Bernardi had called at the registrar's office in Plaistow and registered the death of Dourt, and it was entered as due to heart disease. Druskowitz found out the undertaker who had conducted the funeral, and learned that everything had been properly ordered and paid for, and that the funeral had been performed at Leytonstone. One thing seemed strange. The coffin had not been sent to any private house, but directed to the cemetery. Further inquiry failed to discover the name of any doctor attached to the certificate of death. The next step was to obtain an order for exhumation, and on the coffin being opened there was found, not the body of Vital Dourt, but a block of lead. Further inquiry elicited the fact that Dourt had been present at his own funeral, and had afterwards gone to America, whence he supplied his wife with the documents intends for the insurance company. Some time afterward he returned to Europe, went to Antwerp, bought a ship, sent her to sea with a lot of rubbish, and having previously insured her for a large sum, had her burned. Arrested and brought to trial, he was visited by Druskowitz, who felt sure that this was the man he wanted. Dourt was found guilty and was condemned to imprisonment, with hard labor; but the French Government claimed him on extraordinary treaty, and he was tried on the charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, found guilty, and sentenced to penal servitude for a comparative short period. —London Echo.

The Ocean Steamship Amerique Beached off Long Branch.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Jan. 7.—The transatlantic steamship Amerique, bound from Havre for New York, came ashore at Seabright, about four miles north of this place, at three o'clock this morning. There were 3 cabin, 51 second and fourth-classes passengers, and 162 officers and crew on board, all of whom, with the exceptions of three of the crew were saved soon after the ship struck. The captain ordered a small boat with the crew, composed of officers Brillavine and eleven men, to convey information ashore and obtain assistance. The steamship was then only seventy yards from the beach. The boat struck the beach, but the undertow and floating ice together, there being much of the latter, upset the boat and three of the crew were lost. Crews from Life Saving Stations 3 and 4 were on hand, and succeeded soon afterwards in throwing a line to the ship, and by the aid of the crew of the Amerique the life car was soon drawn on board. The passengers were at first afraid to enter the car, but Mr. Cornell Jewett and his wife, who were passengers on board, entered and were safely drawn ashore, after which all the passengers and most of the crew were landed, five or six in the car at a time. The captain still remains aboard looking after the vessel. All the mails and specie were safely landed. The vessel lies well upon the beach, and it is thought she will be high and dry at low tide. She laid down five yards and a half of calico of an eccentric pattern, and intimated that the success of a great dress-making enterprise hinged on her fortune in getting another yard and a half of the same material.

The eye of six expectant clerks were upon the doomed man. He felt the crisis of his peril had come. With an appear-ance of calmness that belied the tumult of his feelings, he dived under the counter and handed out endless rolls of calico, varying from the radiant strawberry and moss-rose-marked, to the soberest gray. But he came not within thirteen sup-plimentary colors of the required pattern. He burrowed in the cavernous depths of the lower shelves, and ransacked upper ones from the top round of a giddy step-ladder, but he found it not. An hour and a half had gone by, and his stock was nearly exhausted. The proprietor of the store and the book-keeper and porter had come out to witness his death strug-gle. Six times had the wearied lady started for the door, and six times he called her back and resumed his frenzied search. The last calico was unrolled, and he was about to drop his hat and gracefully step down and out, when a happy thought struck him.

"Excuse me, madam," said he; "there's one piece I overlooked. Let me see that goods," and he took her bundle, and diving under the counter, hacked off a yard and a half with the energy and promptness of rekindled hope.

"Here 'tis, madam; exactly what you required," said he, confidently spreading out the purloined goods.

He locked it attentively for five minutes. "It does look like the pattern" said she, "but still I think it's not what I want. It's a good deal coarser than mine. If I can't get anything nearer to the pattern I'll come back and take it. Good morning."

He did come back in an hour, but not to buy the goods. He tried to dodge be-hind the counter, but with the keen-sightedness of womanly revenge she spotted him, and he was ignominiously hauled out and arraigned before his employer. The worst of it was that the latter, in view of the unprofitable energy show in his attempt to effect a sale, had concluded not to discharge him. With the evidence of his guilt so unmistakable, however, it would be fatal to the discipline of the house to keep him, and he was promptly dismissed. Until the old lady succeeds in getting a warrant for his arrest his name is charitably suppressed.

The boat struck the beach, but the under-tow and floating ice together, there being much of the latter, upset the boat and three of the crew were lost. Crews from Life Saving Stations 3 and 4 were on hand, and succeeded soon afterwards in throwing a line to the ship, and by the aid of the crew of the Amerique the life car was soon drawn on board. The passengers was at first afraid to enter the car, but Mr. Cornell Jewett and his wife, who were passengers on board, entered and were safely drawn ashore, after which all the passengers and most of the crew were landed, five or six in the car at a time. The captain still remains aboard looking after the vessel. All the mails and specie were safely landed. The vessel lies well upon the beach, and it is thought she will be high and dry at low tide. Mr. and Mrs. Cornell Jewett and a Spanish lady, the only cabin passengers, are at an hotel at Seabright while the second and fourth-class passengers and a large part of the crew are at an hotel here. Most of the passengers will arrive in New York to-morrow afternoon.

The ship was in charge of the pilot taken on board yesterday. The sea at time was smooth but afterwards the weather thickened up very much. The Superintendent of the Steamship Company is at the wreck. The conduct of the crews of the life saving stations was of the most efficient nature and cannot be sufficiently applauded. They were promptly on hand, and by their exertions saved every one who was on board after they arrived. Had not the boat left the ship, all would have been saved.

A "CORPSE" SENT FOR BURIAL, RE-ANIMATED.

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 5.—The Sentinel publishes a sensational story concerning a young man named Charles Hueston, living at Monroeville, in this county. On last Friday Hueston was attacked suddenly with congestion of the lungs, and after an illness of about two hours was pronounced dead. The body was being shaved by the barber when the razor slipped, making a slight cut in the cheek, from which the blood spurted freely. Some of the bystanders thought from this that Hueston was still alive, but not much attention was paid to this theory. Meanwhile Hueston's father, mother and sister arrived from Forest, O. The body was placed in a coffin and put on the Pittsburgh express train, but the lid of the coffin was screwed down. The sister of Hueston stayed in the express car to be near his body, and when about 20 miles west of Forest, gave a heartrending shriek and fell to the floor in a swoon. The train men rushed to her assistance, when she found the cause of her horror. The supposed dead body of her brother was moving and breathing. The face, with ghostly pallor, extended above the coffin, the eyes wide open, and presenting altogether a weird and ghostly spectacle. The services of physicians were secured, restoratives applied, and Hueston removed to the home of his parents in Forest where he now is. The prospects for his recovery are said to be good. His sister, since her fainting fit in the car, has been wholly insane, and fears are entertained that her reason is a warrior who has just vanquished his three enemies and is in the act of giving with his uplifted sword a last blow to one of them wounded and kneeling before him on one knee; the latter tries to parry the blow with his uplifted hands and with a lance, which he holds in his right, and seems to throw at his opponent. Another seems to be mortally wounded, for he lies on the ground leaning on both his hands. The third, who alone of all the four warriors has a helmet with a crest on his head, is flying under the cover of an enormous shield which reaches from his neck to his heels; but still he turns his head towards his victorious enemy; and is in the act of throwing a lance at him. The anatomy of all the men is so well observed, their posture is so faithful to nature, and everything is executed with so much art, that, when I brought to light these rings, I involuntarily exclaimed, “The author of the ‘Iliad’ and the ‘Olyssy’ can only have been born and educated in a civilization which could produce such wonders. Only a poet who had masterpieces of art like these continually before his eyes could compose those divine poems.”

“At the head of one of the bodies was found a large and heavy golden helmet, but it had been much crushed and had become nearly flat under the ponderous weight which pressed upon it. In its present state it is difficult to describe it. On its forepart the openings for the eyes and mouth, as also a protuberance, ornamented with small stars, are distinctly visible, as also in the top of the helmet, the tubs for the crest. The back part is beautifully ornamented with an imitation of the hair. The face of the same body was covered with one of the golden masks mentioned in my last letter, and its breast and sides by a 1 ft. 8in. long, and 1ft. broad, thick plate of gold, which was no doubt intended to represent the coat of mail. There were further found 100 leaves of gold, either of circular or of crosslike form, with impressed ornamentation, consisting either of spiral lines or of circles. Further three very heavy golden breastpins, of which the one is 5½, the other 5, and the third 4½ inches long. The last is crowned with a ram, the two others with an ornament in shape of a helmet, and the heads of all the three breastpins are perforated, probably to put in a flower. There were further found two masterly ornamented objects of massive gold in the form of crosses; also a large golden vase weighing 1½ kilogrammes; it has two handles, a large foot, and ornamented with three upper and two lower parallel lines, between which is a row of 14 stars; further a large golden vase with one handle, and an ornamentation representing seven beautiful flowers; another golden vase with two handles; further a spendid little golden oenochoe or wine can, with an ornametation of spiral lines. Further, six golden drinking cups, one of which is a depas amphikypeton with two handles, on each of which is a pigeon, each of the two handles, being joined to the foot by two separate golden blades. This goblet reminds us of Nestor’s goblet, which was also ornamented with pigeons (see “Iliad,” XI, 632–635). One of the other goblets is ornamented with parallel flutings. There were further found two small golden vessels; also eight silver vases, three of which are admirably conserved; one of the other five has the bottom and the mouth of bronze, below its bottom were found one hundred of the aforesaid golden buttons. I further found in this tomb thirteen large bronze vessels. This kind of vessel was in high esteem in the heroic age, and we see them continually mentioned by Homer as prizes in the games. I suppose that to each hero were given in the grave the goblets and other objects which were dear to him in his lifetime, having been won by him in the games, or having been given to him by his hosts as a pledge of hospitality and friendship. There was also found a large quantity of small perforated amber balls of necklaces and a bronze or copper fork with three teeth, which had probably served on the funeral pyres. There were further found thirty-five arrow heads of obsidian. No-

and handed out endless rolls of calico, varying from the radiant strawberry and moss-rose-marked, to the soberest gray. But he came not within thirteen supplementary colors of the required pattern. He burrowed in the cavernous depths of the lower shelves, and ransacked upper ones from the top round of a giddy stepladder, but he found it not. An hour and a half had gone by, and his stock was nearly exhausted. The proprietor of the store and the book-keeper and porter had come out to witness his death struggle. Six times had the wearied lad started for the door, and six times he called her back and resumed his frenzied search. The last calico was unrolled, and he was about to drop his hat and gracefully step down and out, when a happy thought struck him.

Excuse me, madam,” said he; “there’s one piece I overlooked. Let me see that goods,” and he took her bundle, and diving under the counter, hacked off a yard and a half with the energy and promptness of rekindled hope.

She locked at it attentively for five minutes. “It does look like the pattern” said she, “but still I think its not what I want. It’s a good deal coarser than mine. If I can’t get anything nearer to the pattern I’ll come back and take it. Good morning.

She did come back in an hour, but not to buy the goods. He tried to dodge behind the counter, but with the keen-sightedness of womanly revenge she spotted him, and he was ignominiously hauled out and arraigned before his employer. The worst of it was that the latter, in view of the unprofitable energy show in his attempt to effect a sale, had concluded not to discharge him. With the evidence of his guilt so unmistakable, however, it would be fatal to the discipline of the house to keep him, and he was promptly dismissed. Until the old lady succeeds in getting a warrant for his arrest his name is charitably suppressed.

The shrieks of a woman attracted attention to a house on Harrison-avenue, Jersey City, occupied by Oscar Hudson, coloured, who lived with him. The neighbors ran in and found the woman lying on the floor insensible and almost entirely nude. Everything about the house bore evidence of a desperate struggle, in which her clothing had been torn off in shreds and scattered on the floor. Her shoulders and breast were parboiled, the skin being rubbed off and hanging in patches. She could not give any details, except that Hudson threw her down and tore her clothes, and held her on the floor while he attempted to pour a kettleful of boiling water down her throat. He then lifted her and held her in a sitting position on a red-hot cooking stove, burning her terribly.

AN EQUAL DIVISION.—“It’s Christmas to-morrow,” said Captain Jack Miller to his steward, “and you may put some plums in the cabin duff, but don’t use many, and put ‘em all in one end. I can’t afford to give the mate plum-duff.” “Plums in the duff to-day, steward?” said the mate next in rating. “Yes sir,” answered the steward, “but you won’t get none; they’re all goin’ in the old man’s end.” That day, when the duff came on the table, just as the captain was going to help the mate to duff, that officer quietly turned the dish, remarking as he did so, “That’s a curious old ware, Captain Miller?” “Yes,” said the captain, as he restored the dish to its former position. “I’ve had that plate for a long time.” “May I ask,” said the mate, once more turning the dish, “where you got that plate?” “I think, if I recollect right,” said the captain, as he put the blank end of the pudding towards the mate, “that I got it somewhere in the Straits.” “I thought,” the mate observed, as he slewed the plum end towards him, “that it was not made in England.” “That’ll do, Mr. Jones,” said the captain; “that’ll do; let the dish alone and I’ll cut the duff fore and aft.”

THE FASHIONS.

The fashions this winter are designed as if with a view to afford protection against unusually severe weather. The greatest novelty in winter fabrics are the fleecelined silks and camel’s hair clothes, which seems to realize the ideal of a winter fabric in affording strength without weight. Of cloaks there is an infinite variety. Square and striped Indian shawls are much worn. The toque is the winter hat or bonnet par excellent. It has a straight pleated cap-crown and a brim which sets close to the head. The materials are fur, velvet or silk, or a combination of the two latter. Fashionable maidens lay great stress just now upon rigorous simplicity of style, combined with richness of fabric. The later models of rich dresses use one fabric, the costliest for the body of the dress and the plainest one for trimming. A style with narrow skirts, overskirts, and a few narrow flounces, either forming the small semi-train or carried round, is coming in vogue for evening wear. The newest colored skirts for winter wear are of felt or light twilled allwool English waterproof cloth, in dark solid colors, the varieties being crimson and navy blue.

A gentleman who gave a goose to his friend Patrick as a Christmas present met him the other day and asked him how he liked the goose. “Oh, y’re honor, sure it was a fine bird. I never see a goose or a gander I don’t think of y’r honor.”

ALL FOR LOVE.—A young lady residing near London was so wounded in her tender feelings the other day by the marriage of a young man, that she sought to end her stay in this “vale of tears” by a dose of strichnine. But she was foiled in her attempt and may yet live to repent her rashness and folly.

ould be taxed for city local purposes it would make it comparatively light to Ottawa, but in the same proportion hard for the rest of the country.

Coming nearer home, the town of Napanee has the fine Court House, the Jail and the Registry Office, built by the people of the whole county at a large expense, and it would be very handy for the town if a change was made in our law, and a tax of some hundreds of dollars put on these, for the benefit of the town, at the expense of the people of the county as a whole? Under the circumstances it is easily understood why a Town Council would favor a law to abolish such exemptions, but let tax payers of the Townships enquire the reason why their representatives in the County Council and in the Local Parliament, would support a change that would involve such additional burdens on them. The agitation is one of a character such as needs watching, and men should see to it that they are not benevolent with the taxes of their own municipal corporations and others besides before it is too late.

Every one knows that the large cities and towns, where our public buildings are erected, derive immense local advantages from these large outlays of public money. They not only give employ to a large number of mechanics and laborers, at the general expense of the country, but they beautify the towns where located, and tend, directly, to increase the number of officers attached to each place. It, in addition to these expenses, these costly institutions should be taxed for municipal purposes, in whatever municipality they happen to be located, then a state of things will be inaugurated of which the whole people may well complain.

It was pointed out, too, in connection with the debate, that if public property is to be taxed by each municipality, then the new townships in which Crown Lands are located would come in for their share of the advantage, and of course the rest of the country would be laid under contribution. The railway property in the Maritime Provinces, costing between twenty and thirty millions belonging to the Dominion, and if taxed for the benefit of the cities and towns of those Provinces, the people of Ontario would be required to pay a large proportion of the whole of it, as we have to pay the largest proportion of the taxes of the whole Dominion.

In that case, too, it would not be long until a fine sum would be required for the local purposes of Manitoba and the North West in connection with the Pacific Railway, and where the end would be, it is not easy now to see.

In regard to the exemption from tax of our houses of religious worship, it does not seem to us that much need be said. There are few people, even among those who do not frequent our churches; but have sufficient respect for the moral and educational influences of our churches to be willing to see them exempt from the ordinary burdens of tax. Few will deny that their existence is a saving to the country, as moral teachers and preventatives to crime and immorality, which if committed, would require a large outlay for punishment.

We fancy that our Government will be well sustained by the people in refusing to comply with the demands of those cities and towns who would, by such a change tax all Canada for their own local benefit.

OUR PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

It has been a popular cry with the opposition, during the past few years, that our public expenditure, in the Province of Ontario, is each year on the increase, and consequently there is unmistakable evidence that the Government is an expensive and extravagant one. It has well answered the purpose of those making this cry to quote the figures of the total public expenditure of the Province

A FATHER MURDERED BY HIS SON.

The London, Ont., Free Press of the 6th gives a harrowing account of the murder of Wm. Griggs, a Lonsfield, Essex, Ont., farmer by his son, who is 25 years of age. The men had both been drinking heavily, and on reaching their home the son gave the lie to his father. At this the old man sprang to his feet and grasped his son. A scuffle ensued, which warmed the two men up, and thoroughly aroused their worst passions. Chairs, tables and other articles of furniture were upset, and things were strewn around the room in a promiscuous manner. The other members of the family screamed at the top of their voices, but none of them dared to interfere between the infuriated father and son. After a long tussle, the insurance of the younger man overcame the strength of his father, and he threw him violently to the floor, driving the breath from his body. As the father lay there gasping for breath, the infuriated son kicked him on the head with his heavy stog boots, and by chance struck a fatal point, the right temple. A spasmotic tremor ran through his frame, and his soul took its flight. He neither moved nor spoke. The son stood over him for a moment, ready to repeat the kick, if his father offered further resistance, but not seeing him move he stooped over and spoke to him. Receiving no answer he took hold of the old man's hand and shook him, but he exhibited no signs of life. Letting go the hand, the father's arm dropped limber upon his lifeless form. Then the son in his whisky muddled condition, began to realize what he had done. In semi-stupor state he stood gazing at the corpse of him who gave him life, and from whom he had just taken it, while the other members of the family, in a frenzy of despair at the awful scene they had just witnessed, ran around the room ringing their hands and weeping in the most pitiful manner. As the son fully realized the terrible crime he had committed, the effect of the liquor passed rapidly away. Without speaking a word to the other members of the family, or answering the many questions put to him, he walked deliberately from his home and delivered himself to the nearest officer. He is now lying in jail awaiting trial for murder.

THE PLAYFUL DUEL.WHAT THE SUN SKITTER THINKS ABOUT IT.

The spectacle of two hot-headed young men scouring the country for a convenient place to pepper each other's diaphragm and disarrange each other's internal economy is not by any means an ennobling one. Nor will it add much to the romance of the occasion if the combatants are marched before a Justice of the Peace and arranged on a charge of attempted homicide, with their seconds as accessories before the deed. Likewise will it be a warning to young men never to promise to marry anybody whom they don't intend to marry, particularly if the object of adoration has a big brother, and the big brother be in the habit of carrying horsewhips. There was a lamentable failure on the part of the New York papers in providing the public with trustworthy details of the hostile meeting. This can only be atoned for at this late hour, by the publication by the New York Herald, of a map of the injured man's viscera, showing the route of the bullet, with the portions of country deluged with gore printed in red ink. The most remarkable feature in connection with this tragic affair, is the fact that one of the combatants was actually hit, instead of the shot lodging in one of the seconds, or some neighboring farmer's cow. This serves to show how easily accidents may happen, and how careful people should be in handling firearms when there are other people in the vicinity. If it was notoriety these young New York "bloods" were in quest of, they have certainly obtained it, for even the

TAX EXEMPTIONS.

The first division of the House, during the present session, has been on the much agitated questions of the exemption of church property and the Government property of taxation for local purposes, in the municipalities where they are located. It is well known that, for some months past the City Council of Toronto has been actively agitating for an amendment to our present license laws, so as to require such properties to be hereafter taxed for municipal purposes. The principle advocated, in connection with this agitation, is that all property of all kinds in each city, town or other municipality shall be held liable to municipal assessment and taxation, and a committee of the Toronto Council was appointed who sent circulars to various other Councils over the Province asking them to join in the demand. Many of these Councils did so, very thoughtlessly and foolishly we think, including our County Council. An effect is being made to move the Provincial Parliament on the strength of these favourable responses, and the Opposition has taken the opportunity of trying to make a little political capital out of it.

When the Governors speech was being discussed in the House, Mr. Launder, on behalf of the Opposition, moved an amendment expressing regret that the matter of municipal exemption had not been referred to in the speech. The amendment, if adopted, would of course, have been considered as one of want of confidence in the Government, and it was so vaguely worded as to commit those who supported it to no line of action or policy whatever, though it was well understood to be a direct condemnation of those who favor the existing exemption of church property, and public property from existing taxes.

The resolution was voted down by a large majority, as was nearly a strict party vote—the Opposition favoring the amendment, and the Government supporters opposing it. Among those voting for the amendment, in opposition to the Government, we find the name of Mr. Grange, and on the other side that of Mr. Denecha.

be willing to see them exempt from the ordinary burdens of tax. Few will deny that their existence is a saving to the country, as moral teachers and preventatives to crime and immorality, which if committed, would require a large outlay for punishment.

We fancy that our Government will be well sustained by the people in refusing to comply with the demands of those cities and towns who would, by such a change tax all Canada for their own local benefit.

OUR PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

It has been a popular cry with the opposition, during the past few years, that our public expenditure, in the Province of Ontario, is each year on the increase, and consequently there is unmistakable evidence that the Government is an expensive and extravagant one. It has well answered the purpose of those making this cry to quote the figures of the total public expenditure of the Province at the beginning of Confederation and the figures of to-day. Those expecting to make political capital out of these figures depend largely on the ignorance of the people. They seem to take it for granted, when they quote these increased figures, that the people do not know that our public institutions have increased from year to year, and consequently there must be an increase of outlay, as well as of the work to be performed in our various public offices. Since the Province of Ontario had a separate existence the Central Prison has been built and put in operation. It was a public necessity, and has cost the Province thousands, and is a permanent additional burden to the public expenditure. The same may be said in reference to the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb at Belleville, the Asylum for the Blind at Brantford, the additional Insane Asylum at Hamilton, the additional Normal School at Ottawa, the Asylum for Idiots at Orillia, and a considerable number of other public institutions, in various sections of the Province, every one of which is needed.

Taking all these things into consideration we do not see that a good reason exists for complaint in regard to our increased expenditure. We must expect that, from year to year, as the country increases in wealth and population there will be increased demands for public aid in various directions and these must be increased expenditure.

The Public Accounts, for Ontario, have just been laid upon the table of the House, and they show that our total public expenditure, for the Province, for 1875, was $2,063,550

For the year, 1874, it was 2,342,329 Showing a decrease of expenditure of 278,789, or considerable over quarter of a million of dollars. We believe that when the accounts of 1876 are published it will be shown that our present excellent Provincial Government has shown equal care and economy in connection with our public funds. Of course we may expect a strong Tory cry about "extravagance" and "recklessness" and all that kind of thing, but the people have had so much of that kind of cry from the same source, and the most of it has turned out unfounded, that very little attention is given to it.

In a few days the Provincial Treasurer will make his Budget speech, and it will be seen that, notwithstanding all the cry there has been, our Provincial finances are in a most healthy condition, and there is a large surplus now to the credit of the Province. In fact the people now understand that the Mowat Government have not only given us important legislative reforms, but have been equally fortunate in their reform in the administration of our public affairs.

There was a lamentable failure on the part of the New York papers in providing the public with trustworthy details of the hostile meeting. This can only be atoned for at this late hour, by the publication by the New York Herald, of a map of the injured man's viscera, showing the route of the bullet, with the portions of country deluged with gore printed in red ink. The most remarkable feature in connection with this tragic affair, is the fact that one of the combatants was actually hit instead of the shot lodging in one of the seconds, or some neighboring farmer's cow. This serves to show how easily accidents may happen, and how careful people should be in handling firearms when there are other people in the vicinity. If it was notoriety these young New York "bloods" were in quest of, they have certainly obtained it, for even the war in the East looks like an outdoor amusement compared with this sanguinary duel between the man who was thrashed and also the man who thrashed him

Among those voting for the amendment, in opposition to the Government, we find the name of Mr. Grange, and on the other side that of Mr. Deroche.

In connection with the debate the facts were more fully developed than before that so far as Toronto and the other large cities are concerned it is easy to account for their zeal in connection with the present agitation. If the law can be changed, why then all property in the city would be assessed and taxed for city purposes, and the people of the whole Province would be, so far, called upon to pay into the city treasury. The Parliamentary buildings, belonging to the people of the whole of Ontario, are located in Toronto, and they would then be assessed for some hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the people of the entire Province would be required to pay the tax upon the amount for the benefit of the Toronto treasury. The Normal Schools, the University Buildings, the Central Prison, and other public institutions of that kind, all located in that city, would all be taxed, and every farmer and property holder in the Province would have additional tax levied upon him to make up the amounts. Nor would it end with Toronto. The city of Ottawa has the Dominion Government buildings, a Normal School, and other important institutions, which have cost our whole people some million of dollars, and if all the people... They seem to take it for granted, when they quote these increased figures, that the people do not know that our public institutions have increased from year to year, and consequently there must be an increase of outlay, as well as of the work to be performed in our various public offices. DEATH OF MR. PETER GRAHAM M. P. P.

KINGSTON, Jan. 12.—Peter Graham, member of the Local Legislature for the County of Frontenac, died at his home in the Township of Pittsburg this morning.

Mr. Graham died after a month's illness. He was a gentleman entitled to the palm for good nature. His disposition was the embodiment of the term. He was upright and just in the fullest sense. His happy character made him very popular and his path in public life an easy one. He was Reeve of Pittsburg for years and was elected Warden of Frontenac by a unanimous vote. He was elected for the Local Legislature at the general election for Ontario in 1874 by a large majority. He was for the past two years President of the newly established Midland Central Fair. For almost a score of years he has been an officer in the Kingston Field Battery. The most prominent memorial however to Mr. Graham's name is the free roads of Pittsburg.

Over one hundred thousand unfortunate have found a refuge on Austrian territory, flying from the Turk. So heavy and continued has been the influx that there has been recalled the precedent of the colonization of Booska, lying between the Danube and the Theiss, by the Serbs at the close of the seventeenth century.

A THRILLING SCENE.

The following incident occurred during a general review of the Austrian cavalry a few months ago. Not far from 30,000 cavalry were in line. A little child, a girl—of not more than four years, standing in the front row of spectators, either from fright or some other cause, rushed out into the open field just as a squadron of hussars came sweeping around from the main body. They made the detour for the purpose of saluting the Empress, whose carriage was drawn up in that part of the park round. Down came the flying squadron, charging at a gallop down directly upon the child. The mother was paralyzed, as were others for there could be no rescue from the line of spectators. The Empress uttered a cry of horror, for the child's destruction seemed inevitable. In such a terrible destruction—the trampling to death by a thousand horsemen. Directly under the feet of the horses was the little one—an other instant must seal its doom—when a stalwart hussar, who was in the front line, without slackening his speed or loosing his hold threw himself over by the side of his horse's neck, seized and lifted the child, and placed it in safety upon his saddlebow; and this he did without changing his pace or breaking the correct alignment of the squadron. Ten thousand voices hailed with rapturous applause the gallant deed, and other thousand applauded when they knew. Two women there were who could only sob forth their gratitude in broken accents—the mother and the Empress. And a proud and happy moment it must have been for the hussar when his Emperor, taking from his own breast the richly enamelled Cross of the Order of Maria Theresa hung it upon the breast of his brave and gallant trooper.

FATHER MURDERED BY HIS SON.

The London, Ont., Free Press of the gives a harrowing account of the order of Wm. Griggs, a Lonsdale, sex, Ont., farmer by his son, who is years of age. The men had both been drinking heavily, and on reaching their home the son gave the lie to his father. At this the old man sprang to his feet and grasped his son. A scuffle ensued, which warmed the two men up, and thoroughly aroused their worst passions. Chairs, tables and other articles furniture were upset, and things were thrown around the room in a promiscuous manner. The other members of the family screamed at the top of their voices, but none of them dared to interfere between the infuriated father and son. After long tussle, the endurance of the younger man overcame the strength of his father, and he threw him violently to the floor, driving the breath from his body. As the father lay there gasping for breath, the infuriated son kicked him in the head with his heavy stoga boots, and by chance struck a vital point, the ght temple. A spasmodic tremor ran through his frame, and his soul took its flight. He neither moved nor spoke; the son stood over him for a moment, ready to repeat the kick, if his father offered further resistance, but not seeing him move he stooped over and spoke to him. Receiving no answer he took hold of the old man's hand, and shook him, it he exhibited no signs of life. Letting go the hand, the father's arm dropped limber upon his lifeless form. Then the son in his whisky muddled condition, began to realize what he had done. In a semi-stupor state he stood gazing at the corpse of him who gave him life, and from whom he had just taken it, while the other members of the family, in a frenzy of despair at the awful scene they had witnessed, ran around the room ringing their hands and weeping in the most pitiful manner. As the son fully realized the terrible crime he had committed, the fect of the liquor passed rapidly away. Without speaking a word to the other members of the family, or answering the many questions put to him, he walked deliberately from his home and delivered himself to the nearest officer. He is now in jail awaiting trial for murder.

THE PLAYFUL DUEL.

HAT THE SUN SKITTER THINKS ABOUT IT.

The spectacle of two hot-headed young men scouring the country for a convenient place to pepper each other's diaphragm and disarrange each other's internal economy is not by any means an ennobling one. Nor will it add much to the romance of the occasion if the combatants are marched before a Justice of the Peace and arraigned on a charge of attempted homicide, with three seconds as accessories before the deed. Likewise will it be a warning to young men never to promise to marry anybody whom they don't intend to marry, particularly if the object of adoration has a big brother, and the big brother be in the habit of carrying horsewhips. There was a lamentable dilution on the part of the New York papers in providing the public with trustworthy details of the hostile meeting. This can only be atoned for at this late hour, by the publication by the New York Herald, of a map of the injured man's viscera, showing the route of the bullet, with the portions of country delineated with gore printed in red ink. The most remarkable feature in connection with this tragic affair, is the fact that one of the combatants was actually hit, instead of the shot lodging in one of the seconds, or some neighboring farmer's cow. This serves to show how easily accidents may happen, and how careful people should be in handling firearms when there are other people in the vicinity. HAMILTON, Jan. 12.—The Dundas Act.—Petitions are being circulated throughout the city, and very numerous, signed by men of all political parties, praying the House of Commons to pass an Act requiring that where the Dundas Act is submitted to the vote of the people that vote shall be taken by ballot on the same principle as in Parliamentary and Municipal elections. It is believed by many ratepayers that this is the only means by which a contentious vote of the people can be obtained on that question.

CANADIAN CATTLE FOR ENGLAND.—The value of Canadian cattle is becoming more and more appreciated in the Old Country, as is proved by the importation of stock which is now constantly taking place, the Dominion and Mississippi line being chiefly conspicuous in the traffic. On the 19th of last month, one of their steamers, the Dominion, landed sixty head of cattle, said to be the finest ever imported into England. They were sent by Mr. Lingham, of Belleville, Ontario, and, owing to the navigation of the St. Lawrence being closed, were shipped on board the Dominion at Philadelphia. The result of last season's importation of Canadian cattle is considered highly encouraging, and there are, therefore, at present, hundreds of thousands of cattle fattening in Canada ready to export to England, one firm alone near Toronto having upwards of 1,800 head feeding for the English market. The whole of the Dominion's freight were landed in excellent condition, and immediately despatched to London for the Christmas fat cattle show, the average weight of each being 2,100 lbs.

BARBER'S TRIAL.—The trial of Barber for embezzlement from the Montreal Bank took place at Toronto on the 11th inst., F. Fenton appeared for the Crown, E. Crumblie for the Bank of Montreal, and M. C. Cameron for the prisoner. The latter pleaded not guilty, and elected to be tried summarily. J. B. Maclin testified that he deposited a number of City of Toronto and other bonds in the Montreal Bank here, in June, 1874. Witness identified the bonds produced as the ones deposited. They are as follows:—

4,194, $400, August, 1872; 3,438, $2,000, 1st of September, 1869; 8,446, $2,000, 1st of February, 1869; 3,824, $2,000, 1st of September, 1869; 4,194, $400, 1st of August, 1874; 3,484, $1,000, 1st of September, 1869; and 4,237, $1,000, 12th of September, 1872.

Witness did not authorize the Bank to dispose of them in any way. G. W. Yarker, manager of the branch in this city, testified that he laid the information against the prisoner.

It charged him with abstracting the bonds mentioned by the last witness. He first discovered that they were missing on the 16th of December, prisoner confessed he had taken them. Yarker in the box for some time, but no facts of importance were elicited beyond those mentioned above. At the conclusion of witness's evidence, Mr. Cameron withdrew the plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty. The magistrate then remanded prisoner till to-morrow. The Magistrate on Tuesday afternoon, commenting upon the enormity of his offence, sentenced Barber to five years in penitentiary with hard labor.

TAKE HIM BY THE FORELOCK.

Most persons who become bald lose the hair from the front of their heads first; but time according to the ideal representations which art has given us of it, is a notable exception to this rule. He is represented as having but one lock and that lock is the fore-lock, the lock on the front of his head. If you are quick enough in your movements to seize him by that you may hold him fast and press him into your services; but if you loose that hold, and allow him to slip past, there is not a single hair on the back part of his smooth and polished pate which you can lay hold of.

THE TOLEDO BLADE.

The Great National Newspaper.

THE BLADE is the result of years of thought and earnest effort to build up a FIRST-CLASS

nance of the occasion if the combatants marched before a Justice of the Peace I arranged on a charge of attempted suicide, with three seconds as accessories before the deed. Likewise will it be a warning to young men never to mise to marry anybody whom they don't intend to marry, particularly if the object of adoration has a big brother, and big brother be in the habit of carrying horsewhips. There was a lamentable failure on the part of the New York press in providing the public with trustworthy details of the hostile meeting, can only be atoned for at this late hour, by the publication by the New York Herald, of a map of the injured man's viscera, showing the route of the bullet, with the portions of country decorated with gore printed in red ink. The most remarkable feature in connection with this tragic affair, is the fact that one of the combatants was actually hit, instead of the shot lodging in one of the odds, or some neighboring farmer's w. This serves to show how easily accidents may happen, and how careful people should be in handling firearms even there are other people in the vicinity. It will be noticed that these young New York "bloods" were in quest of, they were certainly obtained it, for even the r in the East looks like an outdoor engagement compared with this sanguine duel between the man who was fashed and also the man who thrashed n.

A THRILLING SCENE.

The following incident occurred during a general review of the Austrian cavalry six months ago. Not far from 30,000 cavalry were in line. A little child—a l—of not more than four years, standing in the front row of spectators, either in fright or some other cause, rushed into the open field just as a squadron hussars were galloping around from a main body. They made the debut with the purpose of saluting the Empress, whose carriage was drawn up in that part of the paraded ground. Down came the squadron, charging at a full gallop directly upon the child. The other was paralyzed, as were others for there could be no rescue from the line of spectators. The Empress uttered a cry of terror, for the certain destruction seemed inevitable—n^t such a terrible despatch—the trampling to death by a squad of hussars. Directly under the feet of the horse was the little one—an instant must seal its doom—when stalwart hussar, who was in the front, without slackening his speed or loosing his hold threw himself over by the side of his horse's neck, seized and lifted a child, and placed it in safety upon his shoulder; and this he did without changing his pace or breaking the perfect alignment of the squadron. Ten thousand voices hailed with rapturous applause the gallant deed, and other thousand applauded when they knew. Two women are who could only sob forth their gratification in broken accents—the mother and the Empress. And a proud and happy moment it must have been for the hussar when his Emperor, taking on his own breast the richly enamelled cross of the Order of Maria Theresa, set it upon the breast of his brave and gallant trooper.

GENERAL NEWS.

THE KINGSTON PRESBYTERY.—This session will meet in Belleville on the second Tuesday in April.

MONTRÉAL, Jan. 12.—Yesterday the police seized one hundred and fifty-three boxes of bread for being light weight.

HALIFAX, Jan. 12.—The snow is reported six feet deep in the woods, and lumber operations are being vigorously prosecuted.

NEW AGREEMENT.—The G. T. R. engineers have been supplied with copies of our new agreement, and all difficulty is believed to be at an end.

Justice in Canada don't always reflect the swells and pets of society. M.

ing on the 16th of December, prisoner confessed he had taken them. Yarker in the box for some time, but no facts of importance were elicited beyond those mentioned above. At the conclusion of witness's evidence, Mr. Cameron withdrew the plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty. The magistrate then remanded prisoner till to-morrow. The Magistrate on Tuesday afternoon, commenting upon the enormity of his offence, sentenced Barber to five years in penitentiary with hard labor.

TAKE HIM BY THE FORELOCK.

Most persons who become bald lose the hair from the front of their heads first; but time according to the ideal representations which art has given us of it, is a notable exception to this rule. He is represented as having but one lock and that lock is the fore-lock, the lock on the front of his head. If you are quick enough in your movements to seize him by that you may hold him fast and press him into your services; but if you loose that hold, and allow him to slip past, there is not a single hair on the back part of his smooth and polished pate which you can lay hold of.

All as time is he moves with all the energy of youth. So far from growing lassard with age he never appeared to be so nimble-footed as at present. When then he comes in the form of a day a week, a month, a year we only get a glimpse of him until he is past and gone from us. Fifteen hundred and Seventy Six already begins to be forgotten; it has gone clean out of sight and it will soon be out of mind. And though it is hard to believe so, depend upon it, the new year will just go like the old.

Well what is the moral of all this? what is the lesson which we should learn from these tricks of time? Act with promptness and decision. What is to be done, let it be done at once! If a thing is worthy of being done at all, probably it is worth being done now. What is right to do and can be done to-day, should never be left for to-morrow. If the Express is to be subscribed for, now is the time to do it; if the subscription is unpaid, now is the time to pay it.

And then, is not what has been said above the sum of what has been laid with an eloquent and persuasiveness which we cannot pretend to imitate by our friend Russel again and again. Has that insurance of your life been effected yet? You know a score or two who intends just as sincerely as you do to ensure their lives, but they died without doing it and left their families in embarrassment in consequence of their neglecting it until it was too late. In the absence of our benevolent-hearted friend who has given so many salutary warnings on this head, allow us to respectfully but earnestly plead with you to attend to this matter without delay. Don't let the sun go down before it is done.

The Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford, continues to be the favorite company doing business here, and Hanson in the room and stead of Russel who is labouring with the benighted denizens of Muddy Little York to induce them to look after the interests of their families by insuring their lives. Hanson will be found in the old place over Coxall & Paisley's.

For the information of Christians generally, it may be briefly stated that this institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land Tracts, Books, &c., &c., which will teach the world of the believers, and treat of the "Laws of EARTH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a Fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books, to persons and places where they are needed, as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

Notice of the Press.

The Magazine has attained its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and needless to praise." The lustre of its long-continued reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as brilliant and brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and best years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustrations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

HANG UP YOUR BARN LAMP.

Don't ever stand your barn lamp on the floor or any other place where it will be liable to get turned over while the wick is lighted. Whenever we enter the barn with a lighted lamp, it is hung on a strong nail at one end of the feeding room, so that the light will shine to the full extent. When the lamp is hanging at that point one can see to cut fodder with the hay cutter, pump water for the live stock, mix food, fill the racks or anything else that is to be done in the feeding apartment without any danger of turning the lamp over. The barn lamp is never set down. When we go into the stable to milk the cow, to fitter the floor, to groom the animals, the first thing is to hang the lamp on a nail which has been driven into some post or joist or beam on purpose for the lamp. No other article is ever hung on the nails where the lamp is to be hung. If it is necessary to go on the mow to pitch down hay or other fodder, the lamp is always secured on an appropriate nail before a forkful of hay is lifted. By such an orderly arrangement one can always rely on the light which the lamp will shed around him, and he always feel assured that the building will not be set on fire. Many a large barn has burned to ashes simply because the lamp was not hung on a nail where it could not be turned over. We have seen the farmers move about in their barns with a lighted candle in one hand, which was set down here and there at places where it was liable to be turned over and to set hay on fire. One cannot be too careful when carrying a lighted candle or lamp where there are shavings, hay, straw or other dry combustible material. If a lamp must be taken into the stable or barn let large nails be driven into the timber so that heedless employees can have no excuse for getting a barn lamp down.

SLEEPING ROOMS.

The writer of this has suffered much during the past month through the false impression that many have, that it is healthy to sleep in a cold room. There is no reason nor sense in this idea. There may be a goodly amount of self-denial in retiring to a room the temperature of which is many degrees below freezing, and stepping in between sheets that strike a chill to every part of the body, but it is self-denial for no good purpose. This kind of a toughening process may be well enough in theory, but revolting in practice. We go to bed for the purpose of getting sleep and rest, but it requires the skin of a pachyderma to resist the temperature of icy sheets, and not shiver until every muscle is exhausted.

It may seem like indulgence to warm up a bed with an iron or soap-stone before jumping into it, but rather than suffer the misery of shaking with cold for hours, one can afford to be twitted with self-indulgence or being called "babish." The mother who goes and warms the beds upon cold winter nights with an iron for her children, rather than have them suffer with cold, has the respect and sympathy of the writer, even if the children are of large growth. There is certainly no harm to come from breathing warm air if there is enough oxygen in it and it has not been poisoned in some way, and hence we see no objection to a stove in a sleeping room under proper management and restrictions.

THE TORTURE OF CHECK REINS.

The severe bearing reins as used by coachmen generally is nothing more or less than horrible and needless torture to the poor suffering horse—torture while in harness, and the cause of internal maladies when he is put back into his stall for food and supposed rest. If there is one thing more opposed to natural health than another it is the increased production

THE TORTURE OF CHECK REINS.

The severe bearing reins as used by coachmen generally is nothing more or less than horrible and needless torture to the poor suffering horse—torture while in harness, and the cause of internal maladies when he is put back into his stall for food and supposed rest. If there is one thing more opposed to natural health than another it is the increased production and the waste of the saliva which is necessary to the functions of the body. Who ever saw a horse in a field foaming at the mouth? Who ever saw a properly fitted hunter do so when ridden to hounds in an easy bit and obedient to a light hand? I never saw it, nor do I think that any one else has seen it; therefore, to begin with, the position of the carriage-horse's head; gagged with a bearing rein, out of place, and that profusion of saliva ever falling from the mouth, must be something essentially wrong. The perpetually tossing head arises from the fevered state of the poor animal, and his consequent attempts to get rid of an irritating infliction, and not from the vulgar idea of fiery wish to be put in action. Of this am certain, that the less artificial constraint you put into a horse's mouth the better. The less you encumber his graceful limbs with lumber in the shape of harness the better. The freer you keep his limbs and his respiratory organs the longer he will serve you and the greater will be the labor he will perform for you. Frantley F. Berkeley,

COLD FEET.

It's just the season for cold feet, and many ills are attendant upon a lack of circulation in the extremities. People who are troubled with cold extremities are apt to have headaches, loose their appetite and feel bad continually, and these results can only be avoided by removing the cause, which seems a very little thing to do, but very few are willing to do it.

First of all, the shoes or boots must not be worn so tight as to prevent the circulation. No dictation of false pride should be allowed in this matter, for there is too much at stake.

Second, for winter there is no covering so good to be next the feet as woollen. It serves a double purpose, of being a good ion conductor of heat, and thus holds the heat of the body, and through a slight irritation of the surface keeps up a circulation in the capillaries next the skin, thus creating warmth. If the feet are not thoroughly chilled it is not the wisest plan to warm them by placing in water well heated, but far better to wash them thoroughly in water from which imply the chill has been taken, then with a crash towel rub the surface until it is red with blood, and the feet burning under the friction. This method is a good one to preserve the warmth of the feet if used before the exposure.

LAW VERSUS COOKED MEATS, AS FOOD FOR CATTLE.

Dr. E. Wolff, a German chemist, reports the following experiments in feeding roots to cattle. Two cows were experimented on, which together weighed 650 pounds. They received daily, during the whole time, 8½ pounds of hay, 1 pounds of oat straw, 4½ pounds of millet straw, and the roots mentioned in the following table, which also gives the weight of butter and milk produced in the several cases:

Milk to

key is to accept or reject the proposals of the Power. A pacific solution of the crisis is not yet despised in England, but all accounts agree in saying that the situation is one of extreme danger.

It is stated that owing to the deep snow in Michigan, especially west of Detroit, there are over 600 cars loaded with freight, between Chicago and Detroit, awaiting transportation east. Both the D. & M. and M. C. Roads are blocked, and the ice embargo in Detroit River does not assist the authorities in the dilemma.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Jan. 10.—An attempt was made by three men to-day to rob the Savings Bank. One of the robbers who entered the bank after the departure of the officers, was seized by the watchman and broke away, but was captured after a long chase. His confederates, who had driven a sleigh within a short distance of the bank, drove away, and escaped.

"Where were you standing at the time this trouble occurred?" asked a lawyer in a police court this morning of an athletic female, whose ~~avocirdupoin~~ ranged somewhere in the vicinity of two hundred pounds. "You can bet your life I was standing at my husband's back, where every woman ought to be when the old man is going to get into a row." No further questions were asked.

VETERAN MARKSMEN.—The Montreal Gazette says:—"It is pleasing to be able to inform the public, especially those of Glengarry, that at a shooting match held at North Lancaster on New Year's Day, where a multitude had assembled, Capt. Alex. McDonnel, aged 82 years, and Hugh McDonald, aged 70 years, both veterans of 1812, were counted the best marksmen of the day.

A new style of winter vehicle called the Russian sleigh, is much favored in New York. It is as broad as ordinary cutters, and about four times as long, the general appearance of the box being that of a delicately formed snow-shoe. It is seemingly of very stout construction, and much safer than the ordinary sleigh, so long as no attempt is made to turn it around in deep snow.

Dr. Goldie, the medical officer of health for Leeds, states in his last report that every one of the 30 guests who attended the "Irish wake" of a girl who recently died from typhus fever in that town, have been prostrated by the same disease, and no fewer than nine of those cases had already had a fatal termination.

London is, at present, usually afflicted with small-pox. The three hospitals at Hampstead, Homerton, and Stockwell devoted to this disease, are full, and contain in the aggregate six hundred patients. The fever hospital at Honiton, accommodating three hundred, has been devoted to the sick with small pox, and others in Fulham and Deptford are now being built for the purpose.

In England the railway enters every town or city by the high or low level. It crosses every country road by viaduct or tunnel. Access to the road-bed is entirely forbidden to the public. Walking on the track by other than road employees is a practice quite unknown and unheard of. Nothing more astonishes the European visitor than our reckless system of railway accommodations for running over men, women, and children in city and suburb.

The wife of Mr. H. C. Wilmot, of Victoria, was the victim of a shocking accident on Wednesday evening, Dec. 20. She was engaged in dressing for Foresters' ball, and had cleaned a pair of kid gloves with benzine. Placing the gloves on her hands, she approached the naked flame of the candle for the purpose of drying them, when they took fire. She screamed for help (being alone in the house), but none came. She tried to open the door and rush out, but in her agony could not turn the knob. At length a lady next door heard the screams, and ran in; but by this time the gloves were burned entirely off the hands, which had become masses of burnt and scorched flesh to her wrists. Fortunately, Mrs. Wilmot had on a woollen dress, to which the flames bitter hunter do so when ridden to hounds in an easy bit and obedient to a light hand! I never saw it, nor do I think that any one else has seen it; therefore, to begin with, the position of the carriage-horse's head; gagged with a bearing rein, out of place, and that profusion of saliva ever falling from the mouth, must be something essentially wrong. The perpetually tossing head arises from the fevered state of the poor animal, and his consequent attempts to get rid of an irritating infliction, and not from the vulgar idea of a fiery wish to be put in action. Of this I am certain, that the less artificial constraint you put into a horse's mouth the better. The less you encumber his graceful limbs with lumber in the shape of harness the better. The freer you keep his limbs and his respiratory organs the longer he will serve you and the greater will be the labor he will perform for you. Grantley F. Berkeley.

COLD FEET.

It's just the season for cold feet, and many ills are attendant upon a lack of circulation in the extremities. People who are troubled with cold extremities are apt to have headaches, loose their appetite and feel bad continually, and these results can only be avoided by removing the cause, which seems a very little thing to do, but very few are willing to do it.

First of all, the shoes or boots must not be worn so tight as to prevent the circulation. No dictation of false pride should be allowed in this matter, for there is too much at stake.

Second, for winter there is no covering so good to be next the feet as woollen. It serves a double purpose, of being a good non conductor of heat, and thus holds the heat of the body, and through a slight irritation of the surface keeps up a circulation in the capillaries next the skin, thus creating warmth. If the feet are once thoroughly chilled it is not the wisest plan to warm them by placing in water well heated, but far better to wash them thoroughly in water from which simply the chill has been taken, then with a crassh towel rub the surface until it is red with blood, and the feet burning under the friction. This method is a good one to preserve the warmth of the feet if used before the exposure.

Dr. E. Wolff, a German chemist, reports the following experiments in feeding roots to cattle. Two cows were experimented on, which together weighed 1,650 pounds. They received daily, during the whole time, 8½ pounds of hay, 31 pounds of oat straw, 4½ pounds of lentil straw, and the roots mentioned in the following table, which also gives the weight of butter and milk produced in the several cases:

Week of Experiment.	Milk per Poun's Poum's	Bttr' Bttr' Poun's Poum's
First raw beet	248½	8½ 30
Second raw potatoe	282½	6½ 42
Third, cooked beet	123½	288½ 8½ 30
Fourth, cooked potatoe	82½	248½ 9½ 27

From the above it will be seen that the cooked potatoe greatly increased the butter without adding so much to the volume of milk as the raw one, which made the milk of a thin and watery appearance.—Agricultural Gazette.

The enormous cost of funerals is again attracting attention in New York. A leading undertaker of that city declares that the most economical funeral which one can possibly have with any regard for decency costs $200. The funeral of the two actors buried in the Brooklyn theatre at which there were ten carriages and was considered cheap at that. In comparison with prices like these, cremation at $160 has its attraction.

When Daniel Webster, the celebrated American senator, visited England after he had attained fame enough to precede him, an English gentleman took him one day to see Lord Brougham. The eminent Briton received Daniel with such coolness that he was glad to get away and back to his rooms. The friend who had taken him at once returned in haste and anger to Lord Brougham. "My lord, how could you have behaved with such unseemly rudeness and discourtesy to so great a lawyer and statesman? It was insulting to him, and has filled me with mortification." "Why, what on earth have I done, and whom have I been rude to?" "To Daniel Webster, of the Senate of the United States." Great Jupiter, what a blunder! I thought it was that fellow Webster who made a dictionary and nearly ruined the English language." And then the great Chancellor quickly hunted up the American senator, and, having other taste in common besides law and politics, they made a royal night of it.

If a man has a broken back we will say nothing about it, but there is no excuse for an able-bodied specimen of humanity, having a ten acre lot fenced in with a six foot snow drift, left to melt by the spring sunshine. There is nothing like snow-shovelling to make a man feel his oats, and we know a few of our townsmen who look upon a snow bank in front of their homesteads with the greatest equanimity.

Weather.

That weather man Vennor, persists in foretelling all sorts of weather, whether we like the weather, or whether we don't, whether we want warm weather, or whether we want cold weather, whether we want wet weather, or whether we want dry weather, he prophesies the weather that is to be the weather, whether we will, or whether we won't.

ROSE & FRALICK.

To the County Council.

We beg to call the attention of this body of officials to the fact that, a very little effort on their part will enable the individual members of the council, as well the travelling public, to come in and go out of town without having to climb over drifts higher than the fences, or their horses heads,—drive through fields,—go slow, and feel like cursing the old authorities who had our narrow forty foot roads laid out.

The remedy for this evil, is to have our leading roads widened, to say seventy-five or eighty feet. This will effectively prevent the forming of drifts in the centre of the road, or across from fence to fence, as is now so often the case. This is so simple a preventive, and withal so complete, that we wonder our council in their wisdom, have never thought of it. It has been tried in other places with complete success. The County Council in Hastings are giving it their attention, where their roads are not so narrow as ours. Legislation in this direction would confer a greater benefit to the County generally, than any other speciality our council can engage in.

Badly Damaged.

A fellow citizen walking up Centre street had his new silk tie completely knocked over his eyebrows, and the crown stove in by a high falling icicle. Not being able to extricate himself he felt his way to the paternal doorstep, where his frightened kelpmate had to remove his head covering with a pair of scissors. As a somewhat similar accident happened last year, the authorities should enforce the removal of these man-traps.

Counterfeitors.

A contemporary says: - Simultaneously with the appearance of new silver fifty-cent pieces, counterfeitors have gone to work and made imitations, and we would advise those who are in the habit of handling American silver to be on the lookout for them. The new counterfeit is the work of an artist. It is made of a combination of metals very nearly of the same specific gravity as silver, finished perfectly, and triple silver-plated, so that by the eye and the hand, it is beyond detection. It even has a good ring, only a little duller than that of the genuine coin, and is possible of detection by practised ears. The fact of its light weight can also be detected by the scales. For general distribution it is a dangerous work of art.

No man in this country is a slave, but every man is bound to fulfill the contract he has entered into. No man need work at a lower rate than that for which he has bargained, but no man should interfere with another who chooses to do so. A man has a perfect right to strike if he chooses, but he has no right under a trade union organization to use violence and prevent others, either by threats or force. The law passed in reference to this kind of intimidation makes a man liable to a fine of one hundred dollars or three months' imprisonment. During the late strike the local police at the different towns where the strikers had assembled were found insufficient to quell the rioters, and after the 4 days' recourse was had to the Government, who were bound to preserve order." He also forcibly condemned the habit of carrying fire arms and other dangerous weapons in this peaceful and law abiding country, as having a tendency to create much reckless disorder and riot in the community. He recommended the formation of a provincial Police force, like the Irish Constabulary, that might be used for the suppression of riots, &c.

He had the choice of position and was placed with his back to wind. No second shot was fired. May's whereabouts is still unknown. Neither party wounded.

A severe and exhaustive process reasoning shows, says the New York Times, that there is no place in a man's heart where a hat can be reasonably safe. But let us be thankful that we are at the dawn of better things. An inventor has just devised a plan for solving the problem that has so long baffled the acutest minds. He has secured a patent for what he calls "an impregnable hat-holder." It consists of a wire cage attached to the back of a pew, and intended as a receptacle for money. When filled this receptacle revolves, carries its precious freight into a safe obscure recess, whence it is alleged it can be withdrawn in an unjacketed dition at the end of the service. He hopes that the inventor is not too sanguine and that his scheme will meet all exigencies of the case. Who can tell great will be the effect upon the spiritual welfare of the community when masculine churchgoer can dismiss his mind and give his undivided attention to other, purer and better things.

STURMEEY.

Letter from a Belleville Man.

Mr. Brooks writes:—"You know what moving is, but you cannot know except from personal experience how very unfinished is a Turkish house built to let. Everywhere something needs completing. Do our best, we shall live in what is but a summer house. Winter's storms break our thin shell through and through. I was, however, rebuked for a complaining spirit while visiting some poor families yesterday. I found one good woman without any fire at all, stitching a fine shirt to earn bread for an inviled husband, herself and children.

"Times are very, very hard here. The poor are uncommonly numerous, and their sufferings thrust themselves on one's notice on every hand. The Turk is said by those who have seen him put to the test in famine times, to possess no love in his nature. I can well believe it. He is very stately, and certainly imposing in appearance, but infinitely proud and selfish.

"The people in this country are such terrible sticklers for property. They think everything of position. They won't carry anything in their hands in the street, except the most dainty of fancy bags. A servant must follow behind with satchel, baby, or what not. They are so afraid of what Mrs. Grundy may say. Yet there is another side of this. There are so many poor boys and young men waiting at every boat landing or car station to carry one's parcels for two or three pence at most, one owes them a helping hand even though he may seem to be putting on airs. On one hand is a Scylla, and a Charybdis on the other."

THE "CODE OF HONOR."

The Bennett-May fracas being the latest sensation on the carpet, we submit the following for the benefit of our high-toned young men, who may wish to avenge their wounded dignity in a manner becoming gentlemen? In the famous "Code of Honor," prepared by John Lyde Wilson, of South Carolina, and which has governed such affairs since its publication, there are some paragraphs which may be considered of interest at this juncture. Section 3 of chapter 8 says:—

When the blows are given in the first instance and not returned, and the person first striking be badly beaten or otherwise, the party first struck is to make the demand, for blows do not satisfy a man.

In the "Irish Code of Honor," as prepared by Sir Jonas Barrington, and added as an appendix to this volume, rule 5 is as follows:—

As a blow is strictly prohibited under any circumstances among gentlemen, no verbal apology can be received for such an insult. The alternative, therefore, are:—The offender handing a cane to the injured party to be used on his own, (the offender's back) at the same time begging pardon; or exchanging three shots, and then asking pardon without the proffer of the cane.

THOMASE'S ELECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is THOMAS, ELECTRIC OIL purely a preparation of six of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any combination or proportion of the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile liquids consequently loses nothing by evaporation. When applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparation nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small quantity of Oils which they may contain.

on Saturday, on the train. "Five years for refreshments," shouted our unfeeling cabman, as Mr. Barber, of Toronto, stepped off."—Whig.

The Whig says the new apparatus for making gas from petroleum, is working well. The work of 24 hours by the old process, can now be accomplished in half a day, or less.

BLOCKED.—The Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railway, south of the Cape, is so blocked up with snow that no mails are expected through for three days. This is not the shortest route to New York after several successive snow storms.—Whig.

SKATING.—Private speculation has given Kingston the benefit of rinks three in number. They may be termed the eastern, western and central, located opposite the Tete de Pont Barracks, the City Buildings, and Cunningham's respectively. They are enclosed, and carefully attended, but we doubt if their proprietors will be remunerated for their labor and expense.—Whig.

MANITOBA.

Doupe's survey party, one of those lately quarantined, has been ordered to resume operations north west of Gimli.

The thermometer on Thursday at Winnipeg stood 40° below zero, on Wednesday at Swan River 47°, and at Battleford 52°.

A fire broke out in the Governor's residence at Swan River, but was extinguished by the Mounted Police with their Babcocks.

MANITOBA, Jan. 13th.—It is probable that the Government will be asked to extend the payment of the grasshopper relief advances one year. No payments have yet been made.

AMERICAN.

Business failures in New York during December aggregate nearly two millions of dollars in liabilities.

The cold has been intense (for that region) in Florida. During Christmas week the mercury several times reached as low as 27 degrees.

There were over a thousand deaths by violence in New York City last year, the list including 152 suicides. Of the persons committing suicide 117 were males and 35 females.

BENNET—MAY.—The strong attachment between Bennett and Miss May is unbroken. Her last words to him were those of abiding faith in his honor and affection. May had dressed in dark clothes before the duel, but his second made him put on a light suit, as black would bring him out in relief against the snow. He had the choice of position, and was placed with his back to the wind. No second shot was demanded. May's whereabouts is still in doubt. Neither party wounded.

A severe and exhaustive process of reasoning shows, says the New York Times, that there is no place in a modern church where a hat can be reasonably safe. But let us be thankful that we are at the dawn of better things. A clever inventor has just devised a plan for solving the problem that has so long baffled the acutest minds. He has secured a patent for what he calls "an improved pew hat-holder." It consists of a sort of wire cage attached to the back of the pew, and intended as a receptacle for hats. When filled this receptacle revolves, and carries its precious freight into a safe and obscure recess, whence it is alleged that it can be withdrawn in an uninjured condition at the end of the service. Let us hope that the inventor is not too sanguine, and that his scheme will meet all the exigencies of the case.

Who can tell how great will be the effect upon the spiritual welfare of the community when the masculine churchgoer can dismiss his hat from his mind and give his undivided attention to other, purer and better themes.

as may.

Armed bands are committing depredations in Upper Arragon, and troops have been sent against them.

The Anglo-American cable, laid in 1866 broke on Saturday about 130 miles from Heart's Content.

Hon. John Young, Canadian Commissioner to the New South Wales Exhibition, left last night for Australia.

Three of the Christian Brothers at Ottawa, were poisoned by foul gas on the 12th inst., and are not expected to live.

The New York World says:—The North Pacific Squadron of the Russian fleet is concentrating at San Francisco.

The damage caused by the break-up of the ice in the Ohio River is variously estimated at from $250,000 to $400,000.

The profits of the Montreal Telegraph Company for the last year were $151,563, Sir Hugh Allan was re-elected President.

In all probability the polling for the repeal of the Dukin Bill in Prince Edward will take place on or about the 20th of February next.

The London Telegraph shows an average circulation for the last six months of over 200,000, the largest ever attained by any daily newspaper in the world.

Small-pox is still reported on the increase in London, and the Queen and members of the Imperial household have been vaccinated.

The Hudson ice-harvesters' strike has come to an end, thanks to the firm stand and vigorous measures for its repression taken by the ice companies, which have resumed work with a full complement of hands.

Mr. Moody said, "There isn't any kind of sinner in Chicago but has a representative in the Bible." And when the Chicagoans found that they resembled the Bible characters they raised $8,848 and gave Mr. Moody a dinner.—New York Graphic,

There is no certainty as to the number of persons on the unfortunate train wrecked at Ashabula. Survivors estimated the number at two hundred, while the train conductor, at the inquest swore that there were only 135. It is alleged that the railway company is interested in making the number appear as small as possible in order to head off claims for damages from relatives of victims, about whose identity there might be a doubt,

AN ANTIDOTE FOR TRAMPS.—The Council of Stratford have evidently discovered the correct way in which to get rid of the presence of tramps. The moment one of these peripatetic individuals asks for assistance, he is taken to the rear of the Market building, where he is confronted by a large heap of field stones. A three foot Hickory stick with a hammer at the end is then offered to him, and he is politely informed that the town will allow him 50 cents a day in provisions or cash, but if he gives satisfaction as a stone breaker. A peculiar expression comes over Mr. Tramp's face at this information—he gives the piece of clothes line which fastens his ragged unmentionables an extra hitch—takes up his quid of tobacco—swears like a trooper—and leaves Stratford behind him as fast as his dilapidated legs can follow him. If you want to get rid of tramps, offer them work; Especially show them the corporation stone heap.

DOWN IN THE MOUTH.—Where there is a continual dropping down into the mouth, with irritation and inflammation of the nasal cavities and throat, with hawking, spitting and a sense of fullness about the head, be not deceived or fancy it a simple cold. You are afflicted with that scourge of this climate, Catarrh, the forerunner of Consumption. In its early stages a few bottles of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will effect an cure. When confirmed, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be used in connection with the Remedy. These standard medicines have been before the pub-possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any combination or proportions of the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile liquids consequently loses nothing by evaporation. Where applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small quantity of Oils which they may contain.

THOMASE'S ELECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is THOMAS, ELECTRIC OIL purely a preparation of six of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound, which could not by any possibility be made from any combination or proportions of the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile liquids, consequently loses nothing by evaporation. When applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparation nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small quantity of Oils which they may contain.

WANTED.

We want reliable, energetic canvassing
agents in every town in the Dominion for the new "Illustrated History of the Dominion of Canada." This work is truly magnificent, containing over 2,000 double column quarto pages, and over 300 superb full page engravings. The work is published in Parts, on a plan which insures its welcome to every English reading
family. To energetic young men and ladies, who are willing to work, we will guarantee
a permanent position for two years,
and good PAY! Don't fail to write for our private terms, sample pages, etc. This is a grand opportunity for school teachers
to make more than double their salaries
without interfering with their professional duties. The work is being manufactured at a cost of over $20,000 for the literary, artistic and mechanical work of producing the plates by the old well known, reliable Lovell Printing and Publishing Co., of Montreal. All letters from
